

“personal war”

Project (testimonies by Spanish soldiers) contacted ex-members of the Spanish Army (two cases up until now) that had been on a campaign abroad and then discharged due to the diagnosis of post-traumatic stress.

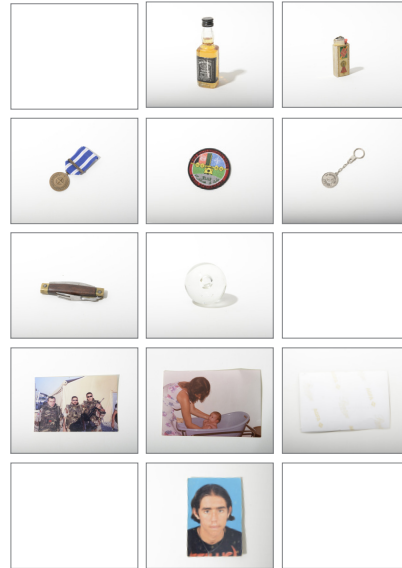

The project's first goal is bringing this problem to the light: why it happens, whether or not it receives treatment in or outside the institution, how it involves its direct entourage (family and friends), whether it is possible for this disorder to lead to more important problems. The work reviews the influence that the young man received from the media, cinema or TV in general before entering the institution, and how his mentality changes once inside, more particularly on the campaign abroad.

The project's second goal is to create a set of pieces that will exhibit original portraits in boxes containing: family pictures, letters, cutouts and personal objects used during the campaigns. They will be presented with audios and videos of the victims' interviews and conversations that tell their experiences as a life history.
